Carlos Denman first met Della Ranger at a Methodist social in this city five years ago, according to the statement of the young lady's friends, and about three years ago he began paying her marked astention. In September, 1898, she went to Columbus, and from there to Detroit where the alleged marriage took place. After that she traveled with Denman and at times they made their home in this city.

Last fall, a young lady elocutionist whose home is in Coshecton, spent some time in this city, and one day met Denman and Della on the street. well, and afterward asked a friend The person replied that it was Denwas surely impossible, as Denman had a wife in Coshocton. Depman denied the story in a vehement manner, even going so far as to say that the young lady lied. But soon after he had oceasion to make himself scarce in this rity, and last week Della followed him.

Della's people have always suspected that the two were not married, but the girl persisted in saying that they were Until the Coshocton young lady first spoke concerning the matter, there was not the least suspicion that Denman had another wife living.

Della was a highly respected young lady, and if she has been deceived by Denman, as the reports indicate, justice in its severest form should be meted out to the man whose duplicity and perfidy have deceived her.

Reserve Torpedo Boats.

Washington, Jan. 13 .- The Navy Department in undertaking the solution of the problem of economically maintaining the large and growing torpedo flotilla in constant readiness for hosthities has gone about the matter with characteristic Yankee disregard for Old World precedents. It has adopted the American system of fire department readiness for emergency calls. The scheme involves the erection of special buildings and mechanical contrivances at convenient intervals along the seaboard, at which these small but powerful engines of destruction may be kept from deterioration on dry land, always in perfect condition, ready at a danger summons to glide into the water and set out for the scene of trouble, just as a fire engine is started at the tap of a gong on its mission of saithe American system of fire depart-

Torpedo craft are particularly delicate affairs. To meet the extraordinary requirements for which they are designed, their hull structures are lightened until they become prone to rapid deterioration, which must be guarded against by continuous inspection and protection. Their indispensable speed necessitates the installation of machinery of tremendous pow er, which must be kept in as perfectune as the strings of a harp.

They were never intended to be improvised as dispatch bearers, after the manner of their misuse in the war with Spain, which happened to result in placing them under repairs, and therefore out of action, when every engagement occurred. As factors in the naval service they are designed exclusively for a sharp, stealthy dash upon the most powerful armored units of the enemy, and perfect condition is struction in their most hazardous of missions. But it is the idea, if sacri-Detroit, Sept. 26, 1898, by a justice of fice is needed for success, that the praponderance of loss shall fall on the enemy.
